Name Change to Bachelor of Science in Family Science

The Department of Family Studies (FMST) was renamed the Department of Family Science (FMSC) in Spring 2007. The new name, Family Science, reflects the Department's emphasis on scientific research aimed at helping families improve their health, financial security, and quality of life. With the transformation of the College of Health and Human Performance to a School of Public Health, it is also important to emphasize the centrality of scientific research to our discipline.

We are now requesting to change the name of the Bachelor of Science (B.S.) in Family Studies to the B.S. in Family Science. This undergraduate program has been very successful with approximately 360 current majors and more than 115 graduates annually.

There are three major reasons for this request. First, the proposed name change is consistent with current directions within our discipline to focus on family science in the nomenclature of academic departments, major disciplinary associations, and federal government programs in family science. Almost all similar departments in other institutions, particularly Land Grant institutions with strong programs, offer degrees in Family Science. The Chronicle of Higher Education also lists faculty positions within the family discipline under the category of “family sciences.” Second, the proposed change clarifies the program’s academic focus on scientific research, evaluation, and evidence-based practice aimed at improving family well-being. Third, renaming the undergraduate program will make the B.S. degree consistent with the name of our department.

There will be no costs associated with this name change.
